What is claimed is:

I. A semiconductor device comprising an electronic circuit having at least one function which is formed on a substrate having an insulative surface using at least two semiconductor regions where crystals are grown in a direction parallel or substantially parallel to the substrate, wherein the two regions have the same crystal growth form.